Herbal Highlight

Lemon Grass

Cymbopogon citratus

This lemony herb is a grass from the tropics, native to the south of India in Sri Lanka. It grows its arching, linear leaves to around 3 feet tall, in temperate climates. Lemon Grass prefers to grow in full sun to part shade, in moist soil, minimum of 45 degrees. On a sunny windowsill or greenhouse, it likes full sun and a minimum of 55 degrees. The parts of Lemongrass that are used are the leaves, stems and oil.

Here are some of the many ways that Lemon Grass can be used:

CULINARY - Stalks and Leaves: chop into salads. Infuse leaves as stomach-settling tea. The base of the leaves are used in SE Asian cooking, especially with fish, meat, sauces and curries.

COSMETIC - Add essential oil to perfumes and soaps.

ECONOMIC - The essential oil is used in soaps, shampoos, perfumes and cosmetics, and for flavorings in the food manufacturing industry. It is important in the manufacture of vitamin A and synthetic violet perfumes.

MEDICINAL - The essential oil is toning, revitalizing, sedative and antiseptic, effective against fungal and bacterial infections. It helps heal the digestive system, circulation, muscle tone, acne and oily skin. Use the tea or essential oil in a skin refreshener to clean oily skin and as a relaxant in bath water. It is also used for children's digestive problems, and minor feverish illness. For skin health, it is used for ringworm, lice, athlete's foot, arthritis and scabies.
